

Let it be known that I, Caroline Burke, a student in Madison, WI, am strongly opposed to both relaxing the rules regarding broadcast media and also to the way the FCC has acted regarding this issue. Considering large media companies, namely those who stand to benefit from the deregulation, have done all they can to keep this issue out of sight and out of mind for the public they claim to serve, the public needs all the help they can get on being informed about this. In a mockery of public service, the FCC has kept secret the details of what precisely will be voted upon, come June 2nd.

Fortunately this comment will be made public, even if it is the only type of information the FCC will grant such wide disclosure to.

It is wrong to withhold information from the public, and here the FCC is an offender. I can only hope that the Commission will make the right choice on June 2nd and redeem itself by voting to oppose relaxation of the broadcast media regulations.
